Artists' Association of Punjab

Foreword

This year the Artists Association of Punjab is holding its 31st Annual Exhibition, and the 15th time that it is an All Pakistan National Show. Since last year the Association has further expanded its outreach from the provinces to the regions; from the cities to towns and beyond from the urban to the rural neighbourhoods. The exclusivity of the mega cities is being slowly encroached upon by endeavours of artists who reside in far apart places ranging from vast arid deserts, narrow verdant valley, cultivated fields, cheerful hills and solemn mountains. The National landscape is speckled with people speaking different languages; wearing varied costumes, toiling to sustain and live their lives.

Some of our artists, as demonstrated by their works on display in the Exhibition, have endeavoured to capture the unique diversity of their respective neighbourhoods. There are some artists who prize their individual sensibilities and try to peer inwards. Their expressions are shaped by their moods. There are exhibits that seek to draw upon feelings of humanity and sense of justice; others that bewilder by depicting tragic events, acts of violence and gross happenings that incite you to anger. Along them are artists whose works are expressive of intellectual conceits or un-wavered in their preference for aesthetics. I suppose each of these multiple and multifaced modes reflect each artist's unique individuality, state of mind and social bias. In the transcendental perspective these are perhaps all parts of a 'life' conceived and valued by individuals part of a fragmented society.

There are many among us who argue that art in a democratic society should not be obscure and so 'high minded' that it baffles; nor should it be mindless or just amusing or entertaining. They believe art should 'trigger thoughts' encourage people to reflect upon life and society. In our terrible times they expect an artist to grasp social issue, terrible happening and moral distortions that have taken root in our society. Directing attention to current events and evil that is creeping into the social and political fabric of our society is meant not to demoralize but to lend strength and hope, so that abhorable happenings can be individually and collectively confronted and surmounted.

Presently contemporary painting in Pakistan is undergoing vibrant evolution. It is in dynamic process of coalescing multiple ideas and expressions. In the process 'Modernism' is being infused with heart beats of our own. Presently it seems we are doing well but only time will tell what hatches out of this spontaneous, simultaneous, intermingling.

In this spirit of intermingling it is pertinent to inform that the present exhibition is scheduled to be transported to Multan in March and then on to National Gallery Islamabad and other venues.

In the end I must acknowledge the collaboration and support extended to the Artists' Association of Punjab by the Lahore Arts Council in holding the Exhibition.
